THE 1963 AIRSTREAM

The 1963 Airstream fleet is representative of continued refinement that must take place in a product when it's manufacturer is so close to its use. The famous streamlined Airstream shape is even made cleaner with flush trunk doors and recessed window drip caps. All models have enlarged window areas. An improved sewer hose carrier is standard equipment. The exclusive Dura-Torque axle is further strengthened with additional axle loading capacity. There is greater galley storage in all models and additional front room space in most.

Airstream, which pioneered self containment, establishes another industry first in 1963 by building only self-contained trailers. Every Airstream in the fleet this year comes standard equipped with at least a pressure water system (with a new water gauge to tell you how much water is in your tank), battery operated compressor, septic tank (which has an improved emptying valve), gas refrigerator (with a greater cooling capacity and fully seventy pounds lighter), gas water heater, twelve volt battery, twelve volt lights as well as 110 volt lights throughout, a water-saving toilet hand spray, a sewer hose carrier, and an automatic switch-over bottled gas regulator. And the luxurious International line of Airstream Land Yachts is even more exquisite in 1963. New stainless steel galley sinks, insulated vinyl bedroom wall covering, deluxe bathroom and kitchen hardware, a hand spray at the galley, and the finest in upholstery and vinyl tile flooring together with all of the standard International Series equipment add up to the ultimate in travel trailers.

Another major engineering improvement is in making these units as weather proof as possible. The improved insulation, re-aligning of the entire plumbing profile, easier lighting on the greatest capacity space heater in the industry, heated battery box installation, and an improved drainage system make Airstream, more than ever before, an absolutely all-weather trailer.
